Response to Kahmel and Marvyn

Word count: 373

Hello Kahmel, when going over your literature review, I noticed that each part was sectioned off exactly as the template requested. You clearly identified your themes and identified sources that supported the theme of your research. You even included one extra source in each of your themes. By matching the template given entirely, you were able to clearly identify the important parts of each source and determine the strengths and weaknesses of your current research question and how to improve it from there. However, one thing I noticed you didn't include when providing the articles you used was the research question they were searching to answer. In the template, she asks for the source, the research question, and its findings. While you did identify what was found in each source, you did not include what they were aiming to find in the first place. When looking at the way you plan on organizing your portfolio, I strongly agree with your thoughts and intend on organizing mine in a similar way. With what you wrote clear, your portfolio will include all necessary materials.

Hello Marvyn, while reading your literature review, I too noticed you followed the template for the review quite closely. You separated each theme and sourced the articles that matched the theme you were speaking of in that moment. By doing this, you too were able to find things that can be improved to further your research question and get better more specific results for university students. The only thing I noticed, similar to the feedback I gave above, is that you never mentioned what each article's research question was. While you provided what they found during their research and the way they found these discoveries, you left out that one detail. When looking at the way you plan to organize your portfolio, I think that separating by outcomes is a very good way to ensure you include everything that needs to be included before submitting the assignment. It is also very good that you already started on the designs of your portfolio which shows your website is going to be very well done and you on track for a great end of the semester.
